CENTER FOR TRANSNATIONAL LEGAL STUDIES LONDON

Dean William M. Treanor
Georgetown Law

“The Center for Transnational Legal Studies has inspired admiration throughout legal academia.

Scholars and students from over 20 countries explore cross-border issues in classes where there is no ‘majority’ nationality, and each perspective is informed by all others. Gaining knowledge, skills, and a global network of colleagues, CTLS students are uniquely prepared for legal practice in the 21st century.”

Professor Ugo Pagallo
University of Torino, Spring 2009

“My CTLS experience has been wonderful and unique: an extraordinary network of eleven law schools from four different continents giving for the first time the opportunity to consistently focus on the new transnational challenges of today’s legal systems for a whole term. From the introductory ‘global practice exercise’ to the weekly colloquia, students and faculty integrate their courses with a sound multi disciplinary approach. A series of social events renovates the original meaning of the word ‘university’ – which is in fact ‘community’ – making the ‘Center’ a benchmark for contemporary legal studies in our globalised world.”

A Global Partnership

The London-based Center for Transnational Legal Studies, launched in 2008 and administered by Georgetown University Law Center staff, is a global partnership currently encompassing 24 schools from almost as many countries around the world. The initiative is premised on a belief that, as legal practice becomes increasingly “transnational”, the best legal education must include exposure to ideas, faculty, and fellow students from many different legal systems.

Simply put, leaders of the legal profession in this 21st century need to understand law within the context of different legal systems and different cultures. These lawyers will increasingly be called upon to advise businesses, individuals, non-governmental entities, and governments in matters that involve parties, laws, and judicial or arbitral bodies in two or more jurisdictions. To prepare for careers that transcend the borders of their home countries, they need to develop transnational perspectives.

CTLS offers that preparation in a manner unlike any conventional “study abroad” or exchange program. The Center’s academic purpose is to examine transnational legal issues from within a transnational educational context. Thus, while the school is located in London and instruction takes place in English, there is no “host school,” “local faculty,” or “domestic legal context.”

Instead, faculty and students alike are drawn from a range of world-class law schools located in Asia, Australia, Europe, and the Americas. All are encouraged to share their own “home jurisdiction” perspectives on academic and other issues. Some courses are co-taught by two instructors, specifically to explore the contrasts in such perspectives. Others include projects structured to facilitate collaboration by students from different backgrounds. The Center’s small size and multicultural orientation provide the opportunity for students to learn in a uniquely active, participatory way. Outside of class, CTLS organizes professional networking and social events with a similar goal.

At the core of the Center's organizational structure are twelve Founding Partner schools, which contribute students and teaching faculty while also providing governance and financial support. A number of additional Partner schools send students as well, and their faculty members periodically teach at the Center. All Partner schools are encouraged to engage academically via the annual CTLS academic conference, occasional lectures, and other activities. Individual students, meanwhile, are invited to apply to CTLS on an independent basis.

CTLS provides a base from which faculty, students, and alumni can examine and contribute to an understanding of the development of transnational legal norms, institutions, and processes. In time, the Center aspires to become a global legal crossroads, engaging not only students and scholars but also law firms, businesses, non-governmental organizations, and governments.

“Being in the legal heart of one of the world’s global capitals, and adopting a comparative approach, the CTLS is in a unique position to address some of the most pressing issues of the modern era. As the world further globalises, it will become increasingly important for law students to have an understanding of other legal systems and transnational legal issues. The CTLS has given me a more comprehensive education, one relevant to the twenty-first century. I would highly recommend the CTLS to any law student eager not only to explore fascinating legal issues but also to further a career in international or transnational law and to forge exceptional friendships.”

Academic Excellence

The Center for Transnational Legal Studies offers students from around the world a unique global education in the law. Housed in the heart of legal London, CTLS brings together students and faculty from five continents to study international, transnational, and comparative law. The result is a new kind of learning space, preparing a new generation of global leaders for the legal profession.

Students attend CTLS for one or, in limited cases, two terms to take courses in international, transnational, and comparative law. Most students enroll after being nominated by one of the Center's Partner schools; others are admitted after applying on an independent basis. (See Pages 11-13, below, for information on admissions.)

While the subjects offered at the Center vary from term to term, they are anticipated to include international regulation of business enterprises, trade law, international arbitration and dispute resolution, European Union law, intellectual property law, international health law, comparative constitutional law, human rights law, comparative professional responsibility, international criminal law, and immigration and refugee law. All students at CTLS participate in a "Global Practice Exercise" role-playing simulation; a scholarly colloquium; and a core course on transnational perspectives on legal theory. (See listings of recent courses on Page 9, and recent faculty on Pages 15-16.)

The Center is not a degree-granting institution. Rather, students are awarded a "Certificate in Transnational Legal Studies" that bears the names of the Center's Founding Partners. (See Page 5, above.) The credits that students receive from CTLS are documented on transcripts issued by Georgetown University Law Center, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the American Bar Association. These credits may, with the consent of a student's home school, be counted towards the degree program in which that student is enrolled at that home school. In this way, depending on circumstances, academic work at CTLS may be integrated into a partner school's LLB, JD, LLM, or other program.

“Faculty and students bring the best of themselves to the classroom: intellectual initiative, curiosity, enthusiasm, and innovative thinking. They arrive from top law schools around the world, with high expectations, open minds, and mutual respect. They enrich each other’s education with their unique contributions and perspectives. Through the exchange of ideas across legal traditions, they create a classroom dynamic unlike any they’ve experienced before.”

Admissions and Finances

Admission to CTLS is competitive, regardless of whether a candidate is nominated by a Partner school, or applies on an independent basis. In all cases, the Center should be viewed as an “honors” program for particularly focused and capable individuals.

The Center's academic goals require limitations on enrollment, and no more than 100 students are anticipated per term. As a general matter, students seeking to enroll at CTLS should already be embarked on an academic trajectory that, if they were to apply later to a leading global LLM program, would make them strong candidates for admission. It is critical that all candidates be highly proficient in English before they arrive to begin studies at the Center.

All students should, by the time of their enrollment at CTLS, have completed foundational legal studies and thus be prepared for and capable of advanced legal studies. Each Partner school applies its own criteria when evaluating candidates. In general, students attend during the final years of their studies towards a first law degree, or in the course of LLM or other graduate studies. (U.S. students enroll during the second or third year of a three-year graduate JD program.)

Prospective students from CTLS partner schools may obtain information about nomination procedures and financial requirements from administrators at their home schools.

Prospective independent students may obtain application information by writing to transnational@law.georgetown.edu. Independent students who enroll at CTLS pay, in addition to any fees that may be charged by their home school, CTLS tuition fees set at US$10,000 for the 2010-2011 academic year.¹

These fees do not include transportation, housing, insurance or other living expenses associated with the program. For 2010-2011, such student expenses are estimated to total US$14,636.50.

CTLS staff is, in some cases, able to provide guidance with respect to housing, insurance and similar issues. It remains, however, the responsibility of individual students to make such arrangements on their own.²

¹Students whose home school tuition is greater than $10,000 will be charged the higher amount, less any routine fees collected by the home school.

²All students are required to purchase CTLS-specified Education Abroad health insurance unless their home schools enter into a separate indemnification agreement. Independent students are also required to document adequate health insurance coverage in their home country or elsewhere.

Application Requirements

General Application Criteria

- Selection is competitive, with CTLS viewed as an “honors” program for particularly focused and capable individuals.
- Successful applicants should already be embarked on an academic trajectory that, if they were to apply later to a top LLM program, would make them strong candidates for admission.
- It is critical that candidates be highly proficient in English before they arrive at CTLS, and that they have completed foundational legal studies and thus be prepared for and capable of advanced legal studies.
- U.S. students enroll during the second or third year of their three-year graduate JD program; students from other educational systems attend during the final years of their studies towards a first law degree, or in the course of LLM or similar graduate studies.

English Language Proficiency

- TOEFL, IELTS, or similar scores are required for independent candidates
- Minimum English-language proficiency scores: TOEFL: 100/250/600 IELTS: 7.0
- Waivers may be requested by those who can demonstrate comparable proficiency

Required Application Materials

- Founder and Affiliate applicants: please consult home school for details.
- Independent candidates:
 - ☆ Completed application form
 - ☆ Resume
 - ☆ Letter of Good Standing from current law school
 - ☆ Letter of recommendation from faculty member or employer
 - ☆ Official transcript from current or most recent law school

Academic Credit

- Certificate in Transnational Legal Studies
- Transcript issued by Georgetown University Law Center

Tuition Fees and Expenses

- Founder and Affiliate applicants: please consult home school for details.
- Independent candidates: tuition fees for 2010-11 are US$10,000 per semester or, if higher, the amount of a student’s home school tuition less routine fees collected by the home school.
- Estimated student expenses for 2010-11 are US$14,636.50. See online details at ctls.georgetown.edu/info/budget.html.

“CTLS is a fantastic opportunity for building friendships and networks across cultural, linguistic, and transnational boundaries. Whilst other exchange programs usually involve students immersing themselves in a foreign university, CTLS is unique in that it brings together students and professors from over 20 schools on five continents. CTLS is a synergistic combination of legal perspectives from many brilliant minds. We could very well be contemporaries in a particular field of law in the near future, and building bonds of friendship now makes the prospect of future collaboration or interaction even more interesting.”
