Notes by Rank

In this age of Twitter and social networks, we would like to present you with a small notebook. Suited to our era's short communications, these notebooks bring back the old-fashioned and romantic custom of writing with pen and pencil. Accompanying this notebook are ESADE's results in the various rankings.

Rankings classify schools and assign a specific position, usually from a list of between 50 and 100. The idea behind rankings is to synthesise the vast amount of relevant information for students and companies choosing a school.

Before deciding, we recommend drawing up your own criteria for choosing a school; or, if you are a business, the school you aim to recruit from or intend your executives to attend. Rankings may or may not be part of those criteria and should never be taken as a definitive description of a school.

We find rankings useful because they help us position ourselves in the world, and you too will find them a useful way to guide you through an abundance of information. Nevertheless, your own perceptions and experience, your intuition and the values transmitted by a particular school should be used as benchmarks.

Make use of rankings in moderation and you will get the most out of them; and they will be more useful to you as a result.
