Description

Short description

Financial Crisis are related to problems with different variables: from the public debt to the exchange rate, from the stock prices to the interest rates, from the banking sector to the construction sector. In some cases, these crises end up in a full recession, with high unemployment rate and large amounting social costs. For this reason, the policy response is important to minimize the size of their economic and social consequences. This response may include monetary policy, fiscal policy and different types of regulation for certain markets.

The course will study the underlying causes of different type of crisis, the evolution of events and problems and, finally, the policy response given by governments. To do that, we shall analyze the historical cases mentioned bellow in the content of the course.
